MDF is an abbreviation for medium density fibreboard. It is a type of hardboard made from wood fibres glued under intense heat and pressure. This building material is frequently sold in 4-foot by 8-foot sheets and comes in varying thicknesses similar to plywood. MDF is a common material used in many interior building projects also available in different sizes and colours in laminated and plain.

Fibre cement board is a building material typically used as siding or trim. This material was designed to provide a product that is durable and able to withstand climate extremes.

Fibre cement boards require little maintenance and offer several advantages over traditional siding materials such as vinyl or wood available in different sizes.
